Gott ist mein König (BWV 71)

Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750)

I. Chorus

Gott ist mein König von altersher, der alle Hilfe tut, so auf Erden geschicht.

God is my King from long ago, who assists all that exist on the earth.

(Psalm 74:12)

II. Aria and Chorale

Ich bin nun achtzig Jahr, warum soll dein Knecht sich mehr beschweren?

I am now eighty years old, why shall Your servant burden himself any more?

Soll ich auf dieser Welt

Mein Leben höher bringen,

Durch manchen sauren Tritt

Hindurch ins Alter dringen,

Ich will umkehren, daß ich sterbe in meiner Stadt,

So gib Geduld, für Sünd

Und Schanden mich bewahr,

Auf daß ich tragen mag

bei meines Vaters und meiner Mut

ter Grab.

Mit Ehren graues Haar.

Should I upon this earth

carry my life farther,

through many sour steps

pressing forward into old age,

I will turn back, so that I die in my city,

than grant mercy for sin

and protect me from shame

so that I might bear

near the grave of my father and my mother.

my grey hair with honor.

(Samuel II 19:37)

III. Semi-Chorus

Dein Alter sei wie deine Jugend, und Gott ist mit dir in allem, das du tust.

*May your old age be like your youth, and God is with you in everything that you do.
(Deuteronomy 33:25 and Exodus 21:22)*

IV. Arioso

Tag und Nacht ist dein. Du machest, daß beide, Sonn und Gestirn, ihren gewissen Lauf haben. Du setzest einem jeglichen Lande seine Grenze.

*Day and night are Yours. You have seen to it that both sun and planets have their certain courses. You set borders to every land.
(Psalm 74:16-17)*

V. Arie

Durch mächtige Kraft
Erhältst du unsre Grenzen,
Hier muß der Friede glänzen,
Wenn Mord und Kriegessturm
Sich allerort erhebt.
Wenn Kron und Zepter bebt,
Hast du das Heil geschafft
Durch mächtige Kraft!

Through powerful strength
You maintain our borders,
here peace must glow,
though murder and the storm of war
are raised up everywhere.
Though crown and scepter tremble,
You have caused salvation
through powerful strength!

Program Notes on Cantata 71

On Easter Sunday of 1707 J.S. Bach played the organ of the St. Blasius Church in Mühlhausen. The impression he made had to have been exemplary. Several candidates were seeking the position of organist at St. Blasius, but soon after this audition by Bach, he was invited to take the position. Bach hoped that Mühlhausen would provide the chance to begin the realization of his goal to create a “well-regulated church music.”

In February 1708 a service was held to commemorate the election of a new town council. For this occasion, Bach composed the cantata, “Gott ist mein König” (BWV 71). The work was favorably received – so much so that arrangements were made to publish both the text and the music. Amazingly, this would be the only work of Bach’s published during his lifetime.

Given the large orchestral resources called for in the score (trumpets, flutes, oboes and strings), it is plain that the young J.S. Bach saw this performance as an opportunity to test his skill in creating new music for the church. The use of antiphonal effects (heard particularly in movements 1, 4, 6 and 7) for both voices and instruments exploited the acoustical ambience of St. Mary’s Church (where the work was first performed). Eminent Bach scholar Christoph Wolff points out the many diverse compositional ideas that Bach explores: “But just as impressive is his sophisticated application of different compositional designs in the seven movements; his construction of the overall tonal scheme, entailing both sharp and flat keys; and, finally, his wide ranging rhythmic patterns in duple and triple meters.” (J.S. Bach: The Learned Musician, p. 111)

The text for the cantata is primarily based on Psalm 74. Given the political occasion, some of the additions to the libretto make reference to outgoing members of the town council (movement 2) and offer prayers that God will bless those who serve in their new governmental positions. Among the more striking elements of BWV 71 is the sixth movement, “Du wollest dem Feinde nicht geben.” Using a key signature of three flats (although the movement is primarily in c minor), Bach constructs a beautiful dialogue in the woodwinds emulating the cooing of turtledoves (“Turteltauben”). The musical atmosphere created by the young Bach is stunning.

By its very title, “Gott ist mein König,” and the opening exclamation of this text (with no orchestral introduction), Bach seems to use the cantata to ultimately remind the listener that while some are chosen to positions of leadership, the believer understands that our ultimate faith and salvation are found only with God.

VI. Chorus

You would not give the soul of Your turtle-dove to the enemy. (Psalm 74:19)

VII. Chorus

Das neue Regiment
Auf jeglichen Wegen
Bekröne mit Segen!
Friede, Ruh und Wohlergehen,
Müsse stets zur Seite stehen Dem neuen Regiment.

The new regime
in every course
crown with blessing!
Peace, quiet and good health,
must always stand by the side of the new regime.

Glück, Heil und großer Sieg
Muss täglich von neuen
Dich, Joseph, erfreuen,
Daß an allen Ort und Landen
Ganz beständig sei vorhanden
Glück, Heil und großer Sieg!

Happiness, health, and great conquest must newly and daily delight you, Joseph,
so that all lands and places
may constantly enjoy happiness, health, and great conquest!
